

Song lyrics with the word hope in it

In these times hope appears to be on a pause. Well, there is always that optimism that gets many through these hard days.

Frank Sinatra did a song called "High Hopes". It was from a movie called "A Hole in the Head" and won the award for best song that year, 1959. A bright song about the experience of hope, "pie in the sky" hopes. I hope that all problems are "just a toy balloon that will be burst soon", as the songs goes.

As I talk with my clients one fact is true. I will keep my feet on the ground and bring a touch of hope to our phone visit. We all want the bad to dissipate, dissolve and scatter so that we can get on with it, whatever "it" is.

Of course, I do not sing worth a lick. What I do know about carrying a tune, is that I leave good tunes to Frank and the boys and girls who do...this is how it should be.

In my opinion, everybody should "hire" a person who knows what to do in the shower with a song, so to speak. This same principle applies to financial planning. Hire a "trusted advisor". The key word is trusted. This your librettist, or writer of the plan that is on your lips and in your mind, but you just can't get it down on paper.

Following a tried and true, step by seven step process, the plan gets written and sung by you. Yes, even in your shower.

The first step is deciding to start the plan, plain and simple. The last step is realizing that the "problems are just a toy balloon, they will be burst soon, they are just bound to go pop, ... oops there goes another problem, kerplop, kerplop, kerplop." This is what the songs says, and the high hopes have to do with your planning becoming feet on the ground reality in the midst of COVID-19.

George